Politics, not jobs

In 2012, this is what then-president Barack Obama said about corporate tax cuts:

“Our current corporate tax system is outdated, unfair, and inefficient... It provides tax breaks for moving jobs and profits overseas and hits companies that choose to stay in America with one of the highest tax rates in the world...”

“It is unnecessarily complicated and forces America’s small businesses to spend countless hours and dollars filing their taxes. It’s not right and it needs to change.”

True, but why did Obama say these things when he believed none of them? Why did he call for change when he had no intention to cut corporate taxes?

For votes, of course; it was 2012 and he was running for re-election. Last week, the House voted to cut the corporate tax from 35% to 20%. No Democrats voted for it, but it’s just politics...

All the news that's fiction to twist

Media manipulation

Manipulation of the news has been with us forever, but it’s now even more dangerous to the survival of a free republic. In most cases it’s what they don’t divulge, and it’s becoming pervasive.

When three police officers were assassinated in Baton Rouge, Louisiana, the headline read: “Former Marine kills three in Baton Rouge.”

An honest headline would reveal: “Former Marine who followed the Nation of Islam and allied himself with the New Black Panther Party’s black power agenda assassinates three Baton Rouge policemen.”

This treatment of “news” has become common in the formerly free press. You are told what they decide you need to know.

If you read or listen to major media, the impression is that the entire country disapproves of the job President Trump is doing. This is the objective: create an impression by twisting public opinion; rearrange attitudes to accept that Trump is unfit for office and must be impeached.

Reports of poll results published in the media are usually gross distortions of reality, using subjects who may not actually vote or did not vote in the last election. Among those who actually vote, Donald Trump is gaining strength, to the chagrin of political leadership of both parties, particularly party elites in Washington.

What media pundits don’t tell you is that the “presidential approval” polls they conduct then disseminate through press outlets are frequently surveys of adults (possibly illegal aliens or legal non-citizens) who are not registered voters or even actual voters. Media simply calls them “likely” voters and the survey “controls” are designed a certain way, for a purpose.

Polling research not only shows that support for President Trump has not eroded but that 6% of those who voted for Hillary Clinton in November, 2016 would possibly switch to Donald Trump in 2020.

The polls are designed to achieve a purpose; not to interpret public opinion, but to shape it, to guide it. Just revisit the presidential election polling results used in the general election of 2016. In reality, American voters’ thoughts and how they would vote was worlds apart from media polling results. The takeaway is that those polls were designed to achieve a desired result. That failed miserably, even though millions of voters bought the fraud. And now the media finds that Trump doesn’t take a pass on fraud; he responds to “fake news.”

Donald Trump is the first president in modern times to stand up to the media and call them out for their dishonesty. But he has gotten no back-up, no support from the leaders in his own party, who simply cower and hide in corners, deathly afraid of the press, as Republicans have done for years. At charges of media misreporting, the GOP establishment-types simply remain silent. Trump actually fights back against the media and the Republican Party leadership despises him for it. It’s simply not accepted behavior for a Republican.

How can a political party that only practices defense even understand a president who takes charge, assumes control of a situation, commands the field and, perish the thought, actually desires to defeat an adversary? Most of the current Republican Party leadership cannot even identify media as an “adversary.” Sadly, their love for power and maintaining the status quo tells them it’s Donald Trump, the outsider.

Misunderstanding the adversarial media, who will manipulate “news” as long as they and their comrades in the Democrat Party benefit, always plagues Republicans.

Except one: Donald Trump.

Congressional perversion

Do Republicans on the various committees in Congress ever take the time to actually review documented evidence about what is being done to our country?

Back on June 8, 2017 Circa.com, a Washington, DC-based research firm, reported that an intelligence ex-contractor planned to sue former FBI Director James Comey, alleging that over a period of years the FBI covered up mass civil liberties violations committed against Americans.

John Solomon and Sara Carter of Circa.com said their source stated that over 600 million documents, and the unmasking of over 20 million American citizens, are exposed on 46 hard drives. The "operator" spent nine years working on the project, mentioning he could "see" everything in the FBI database and "take down every firewall." When he approached the FBI with his evidence he said, "The FBI refused to investigate."

Again due to excellent digging by Circa.com, it appears that the FBI probe into Lt. Gen. Michael Flynn (U.S. Army-Ret.) was not about Russia or counterintelligence; it's political. Flynn was the only one in the intelligence agencies to stand and defend a female agent who claimed sexual discrimination at the hands of Deputy Attorney General Robert McCabe during the Obama Regime. It's time for pay-back, and the fact that Flynn was tied to the newly-installed Trump administration was a plus.

As the Obama Regime weaponized and politicized the IRS and EPA, so it did the DHS, the NSA, the CIA, the DOJ, and the FBI. The intelligence agencies of the U.S. were turned into surveillance tools to attack opponents of the Obama Regime. This included the opposition party's nominee for President of the United States – surveilled before he even won the nomination.

We now have a real "collusion" case; involving Russia, the Obama Regime's FBI, DOJ, CIA and State Department, the Hillary Clinton campaign, the Clinton Foundation, the DNC, and participants in each of those.

If Republican Congressional Committees cannot figure out the small stuff, how can they process the massive corruption cases?

Depravity overshadows much of our lives; profanity and perversion are everywhere. In the entertainment industry, ground zero for cultural depredation, Hollywood's sexual predators use their "casting couch" system. Anything goes; if it feels good, do it. The guardrails on the highways of a moral, civil society have been removed.

Perverse cultural nonsense is becoming more astounding by the day. So why are we surprised when this insanity becomes a political tool to control, or possibly destroy? Or when immorality infects Congress?

Anyone accused, justly or unjustly, of an indiscretion can be subject to a "lynch mob" in Washington, DC, for purely political reasons. Character and reputations can be demolished and the rule of law appears to sit by, indifferent to the damage done.

The one thing nearly impossible to defend against, used by the Left against their opponents for decades, is the accusation of sexual impropriety, by abuse or harassment.

In Alabama, Judge Roy Moore is the target of this today. He has promised, if elected, to work for the retirement of Mitch McConnell as Senate Majority Leader. Enough voters in the primary wanted that to happen. McConnell hates conservatives, particularly those religious, and Moore is both. As such, he cannot be allowed to sit in the Senate, so the Swamp is fighting back with accusations of sexual impropriety.

How can one disprove accusations built on supposed "inappropriate actions" of 40 years ago? If one has no corroboration of one's activities or whereabouts, or witnesses to disprove the allegations, the "lynching" will be inevitable. Unless one fights back against the spurious innuendo, the accusations of sexual misconduct stand.

"Lynch mob politics" is the way former House Speaker Newt Gingrich described it, and he should know, being a former target himself when he was in Congress.

Everyone commenting on the current "depravity" says the assignment of guilt or innocence should be nonpartisan. But as long as progressives use this tactic as a common political tool, wielding the cultural depravity they created as a weapon, accusations of sexual impropriety will likely be partisan... unless progressives end up on the receiving end of the accusations.

As Senator Kirsten Gillibrand (D-NY) recently proved, however, you don't "out" the sleaze-bags when they support your candidacy and fill your campaign coffers. It's only under public exposure that you join the gang exposing the pervert; otherwise your career may be damaged. The hypocrisy is blatant, except when Hillary Clinton stands to defend Senator Al Franken (D-MN) against accusations by his "victims." She's consistent in this regard, unless she's campaigning for office.

Last week two congresswomen spoke concerning harassment in Congress, by two congressmen currently seated. One woman was a California Democrat and the other was a Republican from Virginia.

It appears that our perverted culture has permeated Congress. Over 600 allegations of "improper sexual behavior" were filed in Congress from 2007 to 2016. Allegations were referred to the House Ethics Committee for evaluation. Of the 613 allegations filed during that time period, there were no sanctions for inappropriate behavior. The Ethics Committee appears to be where complaints of inappropriate behavior go to die.

The total taxpayer tab for the processing of "improper behavior" complaints, paid through the Congressional Office of Compliance, was $17,240,854 (over 20 years). The 264 settlements for "workplace violations" under the Congressional Accountability Act averaged $65,000 per victim. No punishment is usually dealt; most offenders remain in office with a Post-It note in their HR file and no public exposure.

Senator Al Franken will run for reelection and Republicans will largely be silent; bank on it. But not where McConnell's nemesis Judge Roy Moore is concerned.

Enough!
